Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Tuesday 18 May 2021

UK Outlook for Sunday 23 May 2021 to Tuesday 1 Jun 2021:
Unsettled weather continues through the start of the period, with widespread showers. Persistent rain is also possible, turning heavy locally and moving eastwards through the UK, particularly on Sunday. As next week progresses there is a chance of more settled conditions to gradually become established. Rain and showers are likely to clear away to the east, leaving drier and less windy conditions behind by the end of the week. Temperatures look likely to remain on the cool side, though feeling pleasant in the sunshine. Night temperatures could become chilly, with late season frost in prone spots a possibility. As we move into the following week, things become more uncertain, but indications suggest a continuation of drier weather with the possibility of temperatures starting to increase slightly.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.